

Also the Muslims Lambs will Discover the Wolf inside them

A car has always been felt by young males as a conquest of power. And in fact it is so. Advertising usually presents a new car with a sexy girl ready to accept a ride; at least in the West, conquering a woman has always been a way of symbolizing any other conquest. Is it the speed that you can reach with a car that suggests to the males a sense of their power? No, speed it is only the instrument; the real reason is the possibility to kill, which transforms the car into a powerful weapon and the man who owns it in the strongest of all, as much as if he had a gun in his hand. Many of the so-called "Saturday evening accidents", which usually and tragically involve youngsters, are due to excessive speed. Speed is for males a search for maximum power, which dominates on all, terrifying them with the fear of death.

In the European society, where any form of violence is obsessively repressed, where it is unlawful to cultivate hostile feelings towards anybody, or to utter words that could be considered offensive, Muslims (immigrants or residents) have few opportunities to show the will of power that animates them against the Europeans. But once they understand the deadly function linked to the car, it is so simple to get behind the wheel and go at full speed against a crowd in the streets or in a square, easily causing terror and massacre. This is happening in France: within a few days, first in Jou -les-Tours, then in Dijon, then in Nantes, a man driving a pickup truck or a car has directed it into the crowd, invoking the name of Allah. The French authorities exclude terrorism, because there is no organized group behind those exalted individuals; they rather speak of "lone wolves", or of fragile personalities which – in an interconnected world like the present one – are easily fascinated by the propaganda in favor of Jihad. But this superficial reasoning does not take into account how easy it is today to get involved and to acquire knowledge through the endless sources of information provided today by the media and the web.

We must think over about this: today nobody really is a "lone wolf", wherever he lives, whatever his religion. Because with just a click he can connect to many others, and - most of all - because even the most lonely wolf today knows that the only real battle taking place in the world is the one of the Muslims against all other societies; a battle that is victorious everywhere, because the attacked people submit or flee. Islam means conquering, since Mohammed was a conqueror; you can not be a Muslim without submitting the society to the will of Allah. The so-called inter-religious dialogue is something planned around a table, typical of Western mentality: but it does not and can not change anything of the intrinsic need or conquest, peculiar of being a Muslim. Today Muslim communities existing in France (as well as in Spain, Italy, Germany) are quiet and peaceful: but when Muslims will be more numerous and aware of being victorious, the moment will come when the West will be forced to wake up from its stupid indolence, and will realize - too late - to be under the Islamic heel.
